THE VINTAGE PIN
CARTIER

By Chris Del Gatto, jewelry expert and CEO of Delgatto, a leading buyer and seller of unique pieces

Floral jewelry was popular in the 19th century, experienced a decline in the 20th, and is again very much in demand, with brands like Chanel and de Grisogono doing a lot with the motif. But most any vintage Cartier item—like this sapphire and diamond flower pin—is desirable.

We buy a tremendous amount of signed jewelry, and because of our unique collector base, pay huge prices for anything by one of the major houses. When we get requests for certain jewelers or styles, we see the trend before it's really out there in the zeitgeist. del-gatto.com

Animal pieces are extremely popular, and snakes in particular have been sought after since ancient times, when they were believed to ward off evil spirits. The setting of huge ruby cabochons in this David Webb enamel cuff makes it very daring.

Everything about this gold necklace is fabulous. It can be worn with a gown or T-shirt, which aligns with the modern woman's lifestyle. You know from across the room that it is iconic David Webb.
